The City of Salem provides its residents with a variety of stormwater services including drainage system maintenance, flooding response, capital improvements, and street sweeping. Historically, these stormwater-related costs have been recovered through wastewater (sewer) rates, which comprise a water consumption component and a fixed user charge. Recently, City staff and the City's Water/Wastewater/Stormwater Task Force proposed a more equitable way of funding stormwater needs to address the questions:

Guest speaker Deborah Topp, City of Salem Natural Resources Outreach Specialist

“What does water consumption have to do with managing stormwater runoff?”

and

“Why should water consumption be the basis for charging customers for stormwater services?”

Based on the discussions of the City's Water/Wastewater/Stormwater Task Force, the proposed stormwater utility is recommended to:

- Separate the stormwater program costs from the wastewater rates and into its own utility.
- Base the stormwater program costs on impervious area, not water consumption.
- Provide equity in the City's utility rates.

KOD Bob Tribotti

Bob Tribotti has been a self-employed graphic designer for 40 years. Bob studied graphic design and advertising at Art Center College in Southern California. Bob spent four years in the Air Force where he didn't learn anything about graphic design but did learn about "checking those stinking badges." Bob was a military policeman and, after training in Texas, was stationed at two Air Force bases in California.

After leaving the military life behind, Bob got his first job as a draftsman in the aerospace business. He went on to become a technical illustrator and from there went into graphic design and advertising.

He became a corporate art director for a company in Sherman

Oaks, California. When the company went out of business, Bob decided to try freelancing and has continued to do graphic design work for the past 40 years.

Bob is married to Susan. They have three daughters and four grandchildren. Their youngest daughter is leaving this month for a two-year service in the Peace Corps.

Bob asked some questions about the Peace Corps including... What was the annual budget for the Peace Corps in 2009? - $340 million. And how many Americans have joined the Peace Corps since its founding? - nearly 200,000. And how many countries have had Peace Corps volunteers - 139.

The flag of The Kyrgyz Republic where Bob's daughter Gina will be serving in the Peace Corps.
